Lunch & Learn
April 17, 2008

Going Green with "Green Globes"
With Guest Speaker: Kevin Stover of The Green Building Initiative

The green building movement is alive and well in North Carolina and around the Triangle. Building sustainable offices and institutional buildings is not only good for the environment, but it may be good for the economy. Most everyone has heard of The Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) Green Building Rating System. Not many have heard of the Green Globes Rating System. But it's catching on fast around the country---and it's even mentioned in recent legislation passed by the North Carolina General Assembly. So:

- What is Green Globes? What does it mean for North Carolina and the Triangle?
- How can the commercial building industry get ahead of the green building curve?
- Why you should be thinking green: what's good about going green?

Join the TCC and TCAR as we explore this new program with guest speaker, and national Green Globes expert, Kevin Stover of the Green Building Initiative (GBI) in Portland, Oregon. He will formally introduce Green Globes to the Triangle market, and explain how this green program can benefit the private and public sectors.

Plus, you'll also hear from Charlotte Mitchell, of Kennedy Covington Law Firm, about what's happening on the local and state regulatory front with respect to green building standards. What rating systems are on local governments' radar? Are there state and local mandates on the way?

Join us April 17th as we discuss the Green Globes and what it means for our area.
